WERY so often in the city's history there dies by violence a man or a woman who has broken the inexorable code of the underworld, the code of silence, the injunction of sealed lips.

TT is written upon the wall that the penalty of betrayal is death, yet now and again someone, goaded beyond endurance or hoping for favor with the agents of the law, braves the sentence—and always dies. Queens of the Spy Armies

LIOW women sway the fate of nations and decide the battle far behind the trenches, enmeshing statesmen and spinning a baleful net about patriots. From the days of Catherine d'Medici, whose flying squadron of beautiful, brainy spies gave her wonderful influence in all the courts of Europe, the politics of the globe have been influenced by them, and never more than now when they swarm in every capital corry on their dangerous intrigues even in the homes of rulers. Great figures of the past, they are great figures of present day history.
